MR. RAYNER'S SPEECH.

One of the nearest bits of irony that has adorned the senate records in many a day was Senator Rayner's speech on the president's exile of Colonel William F. Stewart to an abandoned army post in Arizona, because Stewart would not apply for retirement before he reached the age limit. Senator Rayner is particularly interested in the case because Stewart's wife is a daughter of the late Senator Whyte of Maryland, and he had had some correspondence with the president about the case.

The president's objection to Stewart is that he has "temperamental infirmities," likes to have his own way, and insists on discharging his duties as an officer without interference. Nothing in the charges reflects on Stewart's character as a man or officer, yet he has been sent into Arizona to a post where he has no companionship, where the abode provided for him is unfit for comfort and is unsanitary. In reply to applications for a board of inquiry, Colonel Stewart has been advised that he is not entitled to such a board, that he is subject to the arbitrary will of the president, and that so long as he refuses to apply for retirement in his present rank he will be subjected to such treatment as the president sees fit to give him.

Senator Rayner, commenting on the president's charge of temperamental infirmities, said: "He (Stewart) has not the temperament of the president, that fine system of adjustment that always suggests restraint, calmness and moderation. He thinks Colonel Stewart should yield as he, the president, has done on similar occasions. It is known the president never indulges in forcible and vehement exclamation, either in oral or written communications; that he is free from many of the faults of the race, and that he has given us the most serene and placid presidential epoch we have ever been blessed with."

But, aside from the question of temperament, the president's assumption that he can do what he pleases with officers, unrestrained by constitutional limitations; that an officer, situated as Stewart is, has no means of redress when he suffers wrong at the hands of the executive, is the real question at issue. The president thinks it would demoralize army discipline to grant courts of inquiry to "contentious" officers. There have been innumerable courts of inquiry, not only for officers but for privates, in army history, and no one before has ever advanced the notion that they demoralized discipline. As a matter of fact, if men are to have no opportunity to prove guilt or innocence of charges made by superiors in the army, then the army is on the same autocratic footing the Prussian army occupied when Old Friedrich William was wont to rap his officers over the head with his rattan or poke them in the nose playfully if they happened to displease his notion of military propriety. That an American army officer should be subjected to indignity, his personal rights denied, his constitutional liberties abridged to please the executive temperament, would be incredible if it were not a matter of public discussion and record.

Stewart may be "temperamentally unfit" to command troops; he may be crotchety, he may have quarreled with a plumber and displeased his subordinates in army life. He might have all these handicaps and yet he is an American citizen, supposedly guaranteed the right of trial for wrongdoing, certainly entitled to the fair play which is the common heritage of the American people. He has had neither fair play nor justice at the hands of the president; and the case is aggravated by the executive's assumption that his own opinion and will are superior to the laws of the nation governing the army and navy of which he is commander-in-chief.

DEATH OF GARCIA.

It may seem brutal to say so, but it is undoubtedly true, that the announcement of the death of the murderous thug, Joe Garcia, was welcome news to most Salt Lakeers. The man lived by violence, he perished by violence. The wounds that killed him were inflicted while he was resisting arrest at the hands of officers in Seattle some days ago. That Garcia had a hand in the killing of Policeman Ford in Salt Lake there is very little reason to doubt. Whether he or Sullivan actually fired the fatal shot is of minor importance. Both men were present when Ford was murdered, and both were equally guilty.

Sullivan has been let off with a life sentence. The third man, John Owen, is serving a twenty-year sentence in the penitentiary. It would have been too much to expect, in the light of recent miscarriages of justice in this city, that the punishment Garcia deserved would have been inflicted upon him here. He would hardly have been sentenced to be shot or hanged, though he richly merited one or the other forms of execution.

Now that he has collected the wages of his sins the Salt Lake taxpayer is entitled to a sigh of relief. There will be no long trial for Garcia, no pettifoggery by attorneys, no cheap displays of claptrap sentiment, no raving and ranting for the benefit of weak-souled, limber-kneed, spineless jurors. The man will not be an expense to the county, a burden to the state or a source of constant anxiety to prison officials. He is dead, and the city and state are the better for the miserable ending of his misspent life.

FOR A GREATER NAVY.

In a speech he delivered at what will undoubtedly prove to have been his last appearance at a great public function, Admiral Robley D. Evans told an audience of San Francisco banqueters that what this country needs is more warships and fewer statesmen. He ridiculed the notion that the armor belt's thickness or thinness, its hardness or softness, makes any difference in the fighting value of a warship or a fleet. The men who can shoot fastest and with the surest aim, whether on sea or on land, are the men who will win battles.

There is much in the talk of Admiral Evans that merits the approval of the American public. Hardly one of the hundreds of thousands who saw the combined Atlantic and Pacific fleets in San Francisco bay, with their torpedo boat and other consorts, without being tremendously impressed with the nation's naval power. It was said to be the greatest aggregation of fighting ships ever gathered together in one harbor. No American could have seen it without feeling a higher respect and a greater love for his country.

Nor does it seem to us that our need for an even greater navy is open to serious question. In the navy lies our surest guarantee of peace with all the world. There is little danger of the United States becoming a bullying, domineering nation, even though it has the biggest stick of them all. Every American tradition is against that sort of thing. At the same time we must remember that there are nations that are still jealous over our entrance into the family of world powers.

We must be prepared to resist any encroachments on their part. And the navy is our refuge and our strength. Two first-class fleets, one in Atlantic and the other in Pacific waters, would make the United States secure for all time from foreign aggression. And, if trouble should come in spite of our obvious preparedness, we must look to the navy for the first fighting. To it we must look to prevent the landing of hostile forces on our shore; to it we must look to prevent disastrous damage that might be inflicted upon our coast cities by foreign fleets.

Both Atlantic and Pacific fleets at the present moment have attained the uttermost degree of proficiency. Officers and men are alert and well trained; the equipment of every vessel is in first-class order. The combined fleets could today overcome and destroy any naval power that might be sent against it. But eternal vigilance must be maintained. Five years hence, or within ten years at most, our present splendid fleets will be practically obsolete. Every effort should be made to keep our navy up to date.

"Governor Cutler will sit on the left side of the president," says a contemporary. We had suspected that our beloved governor would sit either on that side or the right one, fully believing that even close communion with the strenuous one would not disturb the placidity of Utah's chief executive to such an extent that he would jump straddle of Teddy's neck.

WHY BILL WAS SAVED.

(Rochester Herald.)
George Barnes, a noted evangelist, tells an amusing story of the attempted conversion of a hard-fisted old mountaineer in Kentucky, who had resisted all missionary efforts directed towards him. "Bill" was extremely stubborn, and, in addition, possessed various other unlovely qualities that caused his neighbors much concern. A final attempt was made by a leading citizen to restore "Bill" to the faith of his childhood. "Bill," said this well meaning man, "do you mean to tell me that you ain't saved by the story of the Savior that died to save your sins?" Whereupon "Bill" demanded aggressively: "Do you try to tell me that Jesus Christ died to save men when he never seed me and he never knowed me?" "Bill," responded the neighbor in disgust, "it wuz a durned sight easier for the Lord to die fur you because he never seed you than if he knowed you as well as we all do."

SOCIETY

Mrs. J. F. Dunn entertained at cards yesterday afternoon at her home on Third avenue in honor of her guest, Miss Louise Trainer. The game played was 500, and prizes were taken by Mrs. J. J. Devereaux, Mrs. D. M. Leonard and Miss Trainer. Assisting the hostess were Mrs. Leonard, Miss Gladys Savage and Miss Irene Leonard.

In honor of Miss Nora Van Cott, whose wedding takes place next week, Miss Eloise Sadler gave a kitchen shower yesterday at her home on South Eleventh East street. Twenty-five guests enjoyed the affair, and the rooms were decorated in honeysuckle.

Miss Jeanette Luman gave a luncheon yesterday to twelve guests at her home on East Second South street. Table decorations were of pink roses and ferns. Later bridge was played and prizes were won by Mrs. James Finlen and Miss Charlotte Holmes.

A large affair of today is the bridge tea that will be given this afternoon by Mrs. Henry P. Henderson at her home, 32 South Fifth East street.

Invitations have been received from Miss Colburne and the faculty of Rowland hall for a reception to be given the members of the senior class on Thursday evening, May 21, from 8 to 11 o'clock.

Mrs. Florence K. Woodruff and Mrs. Karl Scheid will entertain the Monday Bridge club at luncheon on May 18 at the home of Mrs. Woodruff, 49 South Twelfth East street.

In honor of Miss Nora Van Cott, Miss Alice Seckels will entertain at a bridge tea Friday afternoon of this week.

This afternoon the Daughters of the American Revolution hold the last meeting of the year at the home of Mrs. Henry La Motte, 88 Virginia street. There will be an election of officers for the ensuing year and a program consisting of the orations given in February last in competition for the medal awarded by the local chapter. The young ladies giving the orations are Miss Lucile Thurman, Miss Louise Judges, Miss Bessie Kennedy and Miss Cecil Shores.

Captain and Mrs. R. H. Allen are expected to arrive in the city the last of the week, and they will be the guests for a time of Mrs. Allen's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel McIntyre. They are now in San Francisco on their way home from Manila, where Captain Allen has been stationed.

Mr. and Mrs. John Q. Critchlow, who spent the week of the fleet celebration in San Francisco, returned Wednesday to Salt Lake.

Mrs. O. W. Powers, who has been visiting in San Francisco, has gone on to Los Angeles and the southern California resorts for an extended stay. Roger Powers has returned to the city.

R. H. Peale has returned after an absence of four months in the far east. Mrs. Peale is visiting relatives in Kansas City, and will join Mr. Peale in Salt Lake in June.

Mr. and Mrs. S. J. Lynn and their daughter, Miss Winnifred Lynn, are expected to return to the city Saturday after a stay of some months in California.

The Sewing club will be entertained this afternoon by Mrs. J. C. Daly.

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Weir left on Tuesday for an extended eastern trip.

Miss Jane Howat will spend the summer months with her sisters, Mrs. Louis Schoppe and Mrs. J. Fred Odell, at their summer home near Bountiful.

Two hundred invitations have been issued to the women of Salt Lake who are interested in mission work to attend the lecture to be given by Rev. Dr. Frederick C. Lloyd at St. Mark's cathedral on Saturday afternoon, May 16, at 3 o'clock. Dr. Lloyd is a member of the board of missions of the Episcopal church, and is recently returned from a missionary trip around the world. During his stay in Salt Lake he will be entertained at the residence of Bishop Franklin S. Spalding.

The history section of the Ladies' Literary club will meet at the club house on Friday morning of this week instead of Thursday morning as heretofore. Mrs. Byron Groo will give the paper.

Mrs. J. E. Cox entertained a number of young people Wednesday in honor of her sisters, the Misses Louise and Mary Eiselmann, who recently returned from Redlands, Cal., where they spent the winter months.

H. M. Alvarez entertained a party of friends at the Grand theatre yesterday, followed by a supper.

WHEN GRANT CAME HOME.

While Major General Oliver Otis Howard was stationed at the headquarters of the Department of Columbia at Vancouver barracks, General Grant, with some of his family and friends, returning from his trip around the world in 1873, made the commandant and his wife a call. They gave him and his party a warm reception. General Howard says in his recently published autobiography, having invited public men from the territory of Washington and the state of Oregon to meet him.

The general, standing with his hand upon a chair, blushing like a young man making his first speech, answered the governor in a few simple, well chosen words. He pointed out some of the changes that had taken place since he had been in the vicinity, and predicted a great future for Washington and Oregon.

After his address, General Howard said to him that he had been told he could not make a speech.
"Oh," said Grant, "I have been practicing on my feet since I went abroad till I can manage to say a few words." The next morning the general and his company went to Portland—down the Columbia and up the Willamette. He and his wife were standing near the rail of the steamer as they approached the city of Portland. The houses, including the roofs, and the docks were
